More than 17 villagers, including women and children in Sitapur region of Surguja district, were taken ill after they had feast at a wedding function.

They developed diarrhoea symptoms and abdomen ache. All of them were admitted to a community health centre and their condition was stated to be stable when this report was filed.

The incident took place in Devgarh village.

Soon after having the feast, guests complained of giddiness and stomach ache. Some even vomited.

Most of those admitted were women and children and they were rushed to the community health centre, as it was too late no one could attend them for some hours. It was only in the morning they received treatment.

Doctors said all patients were stable, adding that it's a case of food poisoning caused by overeating or having stale food.
